Second Helicon Plasma Physics and Applications Workshop
11-14 April 2024, Chongqing, China

Helicon plasma has been attracting continuously strong interests since its first invention around 1970 by Rod Boswell at the Flinders University of South Australia. Attentions have been given to both the underlying mechanisms of the high density, high ionization rate and mysterious mode transitions, and the industrial applications including material processing and electric propulsion. Helicon Plasma Physics and Applications (HPPA) Workshop is established for the community to report new findings, conduct discussions, and communicate ideas. The First Helion Plasma Physics and Applications Workshop was held in 23-24 September 2021 by Institute of Plasma Physics (CAS) and remotely due to the COVID-19 epidemic. The workshop received 110 registrations and attracted 100 audiences from 30 affiliations, and was spoken highly of by the helicon community.

The Second Helicon Plasma Physics and Applications Workshop will be held in 11-14 April 2024, Chongqing, China. It will be organized by the Chongqing University and Southwestern Institute of Physics, aiming to report the recent research progresses about fundamental helicon plasma physics and emerging applications. Specific attentions will be given to the industrious applications of helicon plasma sources. We sincerely invite you to participate and contribute to the workshop. Chongqing is a very attractive tourist city in China, e.g. famous for food (hotpot), transport (8D), and historical culture.
